Fight for Trans Rights

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill and Thadeus Greenson

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Trans rights are human rights, civil rights. It's that simple. Consequently, the Trump administration's recent move to narrowly define gender as an "immutable" condition determined by genitalia at birth can only be seen as an attempt to strip the transgender and non-binary citizens among us of civil rights protections. It's an effort to craft a legal definition of sex under Title IX, the landmark federal law that bans gender discrimination in education. If successful, it will enable, aid and legalize acts of discrimination.

And for the 1.4 million Americans who identify as a gender other than the one they were born into — as well as the rest of us who believe in equality and basic human decency — that's a scary prospect. The limited data available tells us this is a population in need of protections.

According to the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey, the largest ever dedicated to looking at the lives of transgender people, 10 percent of transgender people who came out to their immediate family were met with violence. It found that 54 percent of those who were out while in school reported being verbally harassed, while 24 percent reported being physically attacked and 13 percent reported having been sexually assaulted. Seventeen percent reported mistreatment so severe that it caused them to leave school.

And in case you think this is just kids being cruel, the survey also found that 46 percent of respondents reported having been verbally abused and another 9 percent reported being the victims of physical attacks in the year prior to being surveyed. Forty percent reported having attempted suicide in their lifetimes. Indeed, for many transgender people in the United States, enduring harassment, discrimination and violence are a fact of life.

Yet so strong is transphobia that so-called "bathroom bills" like the one passed and repealed in North Carolina falsely cast trans women as dangerous predators.

Unsurprisingly, this leads to a decidedly inequitable landscape. Nearly 30 percent of the more than 27,000 survey respondents reported living in poverty, compared to just 12 percent of the U.S. population. They also reported a 15 percent unemployment rate — more than three times the national average.

This is clearly a population in need of protections. It's also growing. While 0.6 percent of the adult U.S. population identifies as transgender, 3 percent of high school students identify as transgender or gender nonconforming, according to a recent study by the University of Minnesota. (If you've got kids, now's a good time to talk to them about what that means and how they should treat each other.)

But this administration is systematically dismantling the few protections these people had. A brief recap: The Department of Justice withdrew guidelines explaining how schools must protect trans students under Title IX; the Department of Health and Human Services rolled back regulations interpreting the Affordable Care Act's nondiscrimination provisions to protect trans people; the Justice Department filed a legal brief arguing the Civil Rights Act does not prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity; President Trump announced via Twitter he would ban transgender people from serving in the military; the Justice Department released a memo instructing its attorneys that federal law does not protect transgender workers from discrimination; and now the administration is attempting to essentially define transgender people out of existence.

If ever there was a moment for cis folks (those born to bodies we feel we belong in) to step up for trans and non-binary people, it is now. There can no longer be any question — our transgender citizens' rights are under relentless attack and they are outnumbered. They have zero representation in Congress and in Trump's cabinet. They don't hold a single governorship or equal representation in any state house.

As you read this week's cover story and look at the photos of the contributors, consider what it took for each writer to smile into the camera knowing some readers will judge them on how they present, whether they're "passing." Each of them already knows the potential scrutiny, harassment and violence they face walking out the door in the morning. All of that is amplified on the cover of a newspaper. Consider that they are sacrificing their privacy — the relative anonymity most of us enjoy, the details of our bodies and emotional burdens known only to our inner circles — by speaking out. As Aydan Ash Tillett notes, it's an act of bravery for some Americans just to be themselves, much less fight for their own human rights and safety.

This is a time for the rest of us to step up to protect the most vulnerable members of our society. Passive tolerance won't keep a bigoted government from stripping a marginalized group of its rights and it won't stop anti-trans violence. We need to call out the vilification of trans folks online and face to face. It's going to take making sure transgender and non-binary people are part of our calculus when we vote or call our representatives, from the White House to the school board.

And if you can offer to literally stand with the transgender people in your life when they don't feel safe, that's something. Just listening to them is a good place to start. ●

#MenToo

Editor:
In the era of the #Metoo movement, male victims of sexual abuse are not being heard (“The Right Time to Come Forward with Your Sexual Assault,” Oct. 4). In his 2018 Netflix special, comedian Joe Rogan makes a mockery of male abuse victims and belittles their experiences. Rogan seems to think that only women can be victims of sexual abuse, but this is wrong.

Rogan said, “I’m sexist against men. I decided during this whole Harvey Weinstein thing ... if he had done the exact same thing to men ... I wouldn’t even be slightly upset ... I’d go, “Ha-ha!” ... I wouldn’t be clamoring for justice.”

Rogan goes on to say that he would congratulate his son on the opportunity to gain a superhero role by being abused by the female version of Harvey Weinstein and would pressure his son to take the role. This is a disgusting promotion of abuse and serves no purpose but to make light of the trauma many boys and men experience in their lives. According to the National Sexual Violence Resource Center, one in six boys will be sexually abused before the age of 18. Thirty-five percent of men report significant impacts like PTSD resulting from the trauma.

It is socially irresponsible and morally reprehensible to openly condone abuse. Male victims already have low rates of reporting due to social stigma. Many men endure their traumatic experience silently and alone. Joe Rogan is just one example of the toxic environment in our society. While the #MeToo movement is making strides to open up the cultural conversation surrounding consent, there are still many remnants of gender bias that linger. If we want to have a society that promotes gender equality, we must begin to take a critical look at the double standards of our gender roles. It is time to support survivors, not re-victimizing them by mocking their pain for “entertainment” value.

Sadie's Story

A sixth grader shares her experiences with racism in Arcata

By Héctor Alejandro Arzate

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Editor's note: This story contains offensive language. It is the Journal's policy not to alter direct quotations or to censor language, no matter how offensive, as it runs the risk of sanitizing that which should not be sanitized.

Sadie Shelmire stood behind the podium and read through her notes before looking up at her mother, who watched as the room filled with people. Although Sadie seemed nervous, her head was adorned with a crown of black and gold box-braids that almost radiated joy and confidence.

"Well, I'm actually feeling pretty good that I'm brave enough to talk about this in front of a lot of people," said the Sunny Brae Middle School sixth grader. "I'm really excited to tell them my life stories and what I had to go through and what can change."

As a student of color in the Arcata Elementary School District, Sadie wanted to share her experiences of racialized bullying to help other African-American children and offer teachers some advice as to how they can be more supportive. For Humboldt State University's 20th annual Campus and Community Dialogue on Race, Sadie facilitated her own workshop titled, "Loving the Skin I'm In: My Story," on Oct. 29.

"I can help other African-American children deal with racial comments or if they've felt down at any point for not having a lot of people there to kind of relate to," Sadie said. "In my experiences, I had to really just wait until I got home and talked to my parent."

Sadie described her time at Arcata Elementary School, where classmates would often use her race against her as an insult and lob racial slurs.

"There's this one girl that I would have trouble with since kindergarten," Sadie said. "She would use a lot of words against me like, 'Your skin looks like poop,' or 'You would look pretty if you were white,' or stuff like that."

Although she did have support from a few teachers and friends, Sadie said her negative experiences could have been prevented.

"We plan on being very fair today," Tay Triggs, Sadie's mother and HSU's associate dean of student engagement and leadership, said. "Sadie had a great experience at her elementary school but it was riddled with things that didn't have to happen the way they did."

The event drew a large crowd of students and community members, including some parents and school staff, with about 150 people attending, according to HSU Library Media Coordinator and dialogue organizer Kumi Watanabe-Schock.

Among the crowd were Suzan DiRicco and her two white sons, a kindergartener and a fifth grader. DiRicco felt it was important to bring her children to the dialogue to hear what students like Sadie had to say.

"The school they go to is not super super diverse and I think it's really important to get the exposure," DiRicco said. "Just to be amongst a peer of their own in front of everybody, speaking on a topic like this, I think is amazing. I just want it to rub off on them."

The workshop garnered so much community interest that organizers moved it from a small room on campus to the much larger Kate Buchanan Room. Watanabe-Schock hopes the event is one of many that will create more collaboration between HSU and the off-campus community.

"We can't just work in a bubble," she said. "We really need to work with the community. It just makes sense. I think a lot of people are also interested in having K-12 components to train teachers and also parents, so we can share. That's why Tay and Sadie's presentation was great."

Using a talk show-like format, Triggs interviewed Sadie about what it was like navigating incidents of racialized bullying and how her school dealt with them. Sadie said she didn't feel like her school administrators took her feelings seriously.

"Instead of sending me back to class right after this incident happened, while I'm still crying, at least send me to the counselor's office so that I can fully let it out," Sadie said. "If somebody would have said something about your race, that would have changed [your] whole day. At least let [kids] have a chance to go home so that they can really get ready for the next day at school. Obviously, that's going to distract them from learning."

Triggs shared that, as a mother, it was frustrating to watch her daughter go through that hardship while school administrators seemed indifferent.

RESTAURANT 301 EARNS WINE SPECTATOR GRAND AWARD FOR THE 21ST CONSECUTIVE YEAR

"We are very humbled to have received a grand award for the 21st year. Fewer than a hundred restaurants in the world have received this distinction."

-Mark Carter, owner Restaurant 301

Join us Sunday through Thursday for our $25 prix fixe menu. This amazing deal offers a 3 course meal from 5-6 PM Sunday through Thursday until May!

RESTAURANT 301 & CARTER HOUSE INNS 301 L St. Eureka 707.444.8062 carterhouse.com

"You're treating these racial incidents as if they're like any other kind of incident happening," Triggs said. "No one called her the Wicked Witch of the West — we'd be having a very different conversation about that. They told her her skin looks like poop. Someone called her a 'nigger.' Someone called her a 'coon.'"

In most grade schools, bullying is a serious issue. With racism mixed in, it can make focusing on learning an impossible for some students.

"I used to just pray last year," Sadie said. "I prayed that nothing's going to happen today. No one is going to use my race against me. No one's going to do any of that stuff."

But giving Arcata Elementary School a fair shake was important to Sadie and Triggs. Among the teachers and after-school assistants working to stand up for students of color was an outspoken audience member named Julie. She said parents on both ends of racialized bullying have come together to hold community-building events at school.

"I was a school social worker at the time when Sadie was going through all of this stuff," she said. "I just wanted to say that there were caring people at that school that really tried to end racism through some of those really hard times. It's not going to take away all the hard, horrible stuff that you experienced but we continue to try and improve the stuff that you were dealing with. I'm so sorry."

Many people find it uncomfortable to talk about race but Watanabe-Schock said the dialogue is designed to be a step toward inclusivity and understanding, giving white people insight into what marginalized people experience in a town like Arcata, despite the best efforts of some.

"You can pick and choose when to have a difficult conversation but some people don't have that choice. It's a difficult conversation on a daily basis," Watanabe-Schock said. "I wish people were more open-minded and willing to learn, and willing to sit through a tough conversation."

Despite the hardship of being an African-American student in a predominantly white community, Sadie has manifested a voice of her own that she hopes will inspire other students of color.

"Now that I actually have a voice in sixth grade ... instead of focusing on all the negativity and the haters, I just like to go to school with my friends and learn," Sadie said. "If they ever try to get to you, just turn your back and say, 'Talk to the hand,' and walk away with your friends. ... If you don't have friends, walk away solo. That means you're just confident enough."

‘Sunshine Every Day’

Remembering the short life of Key’Mann Stringer

By Kimberly Wear
kim@northcoastjournal.com

When professor Rae Robison first met Key’Maan Stringer during the orientation for incoming students in Humboldt State University’s Department of Theatre, Film and Dance in August, the 19-year-old freshman immediately stood out.

“He came over and said, ‘I just want to thank you. I’m so excited,’ and he hugged me and I’m not a hugger,” Robison recalled. “Then, every single time I saw him on campus, he would yell, ‘Rae,’ and he would give me a hug.”

He was simply “a very sweet boy,” she said, who made his way to college despite facing overwhelming obstacles, arriving in Humboldt County from Los Angeles to begin classes just 12 weeks ago.

“I have just never met anyone who was so joyful, every time you met him, in my life. Ever,” Robison said. “It just breaks my heart.”

The aspiring actor known for his bright smile and a bubbly personality that could light up a room is presumed to have drowned after being swept off the North Jetty on Oct. 29 while trying to free a fishing line that had become entangled in the rocks.

Now those left behind are grappling with the sudden loss of a young man who held so much promise — a first-generation college student who had endured homelessness and the foster care system, yet remained eternally optimistic and determined to chart a new course for his life.

Corliss Bennett, director of the university’s Cultural Centers for Academic Excellence, was at the airport to pick up Stringer when he first arrived in town after one of her sorority sisters, who works as a transitional social worker in Los Angeles, let her know he was coming to attend Humboldt State.

Bennett remembers how Stringer looked at the bucolic fields as they drove down U.S. Highway 101 and exclaimed in amazement, “Wow, a cow,” and how she laughed and replied back, “Welcome to Humboldt.”

“We both just cracked up,” Bennett said.

Immediately she took on the role of mom, helping Stringer move into his residence hall and taking him shopping at Target with money donated by members of her sorority and other close friends.

When he got his Humboldt State ID, she was there to record the moment as he beamed proudly for the camera, recalling how he turned to her, saying, “Look Ma, I’m a college student now.”

These 12 weeks he spent on campus were some of the most stable in his life, she said, and Stringer would stop by her office at least three times a week — but always on Mondays when she worked late — to check in and say hello, leaving a note if he missed her.

On Oct. 29, she said she kept watching the clock, wondering where he was, when she got a call from the vice president of student affairs telling her he was gone.

"I just dropped the phone and screamed at the top of my lungs," said Bennett, who is still reeling from the fatal stabbing of David Josiah Lawson, who was killed last year on April 15, which happens to be Stringer's birthday.

Both, she said, died trying to help others.

As news spread on social media, those who knew him celebrated Stringer's "light and incredible spirit," describing him as the "most loving, kind and incredible person" who was "the life of the room with a contagious smile."

Just as Stringer made an immediate impression during his short time at Humboldt State, he also left an indelible imprint on those who knew him during high school, including his multimedia teacher Darryl McCane, who described him as "sunshine every day."

McCane, a film director, taught Stringer in a visual and performing arts program at Washington Preparatory Academy, along with several of his four siblings who also attended the school, including Stringer's identical twin brother from whom he was "inseparable."

"His brothers and sister just have to be inconsolable," McCane said, adding the family was "very, very close" and all of the siblings were incredibly helpful kids who worked hard to stay together.

While the fivesome moved to a different high school before Stringer graduated, McCane says the two of them stayed in touch and he last saw his former student at a track championship in May, where he and his twin placed in several events.

"He was there and he hugged me and he was so excited he was going to Humboldt State," McCane said. "I was just so proud of him. ... A lot of teachers at Washington are very, very hurt."

McCane, who integrates life lessons into his arts classes at the school located in Westmount, an unincorporated area of Los Angeles plagued by poverty and gangs, said he takes some solace in knowing Stringer's life wasn't taken in one of the senseless acts of violence too many of his students face but a tragic accident.

Stringer, he said, took those lessons to heart and had the inner drive to reach his full potential.

"He was going for it," McCane said. "He had a destiny and it was denied in that accident. ... It's just a lesson that life is short."

The U.S. Coast Guard scoured 160 square-nautical miles over 16 hours but the search was suspended the day after Stringer was swept into the water. A man who was at the jetty jumped in after him but was unable to reach Stringer in time.

Troy Nicolini of the National Weather Service said the jetty can unfortunately create a false sense of security about the size of the waves, likely leaving Stringer unaware of their true size until he was down lower on the rocks, where he was washed into the cold water.

He said the jetty is an "extremely tenuous place" to be between fall and spring and can be dangerous, saying no one should be out there during that six-month interval and anyone who does fish there should be wearing a lifejacket, no matter the time of year.

The region's coastline is notoriously treacherous. Some beaches — those that are flat and have easy access to higher ground — are less dangerous but the cold water at each makes survival difficult for anyone swept in.

Bennett said she knows Stringer wouldn't have thought twice about going to free that fishing line, not realizing the danger, because that was just the kind of kid he was, always ready to help someone.

"He genuinely cared for others," she said, adding it breaks her heart to think about the fear and pain Stringer must have felt in that moment when he got hit by the wave, suddenly powerless and alone.

"It's so tragic he won't be able graduate from college like he set out to do," Bennett said.

On Nov. 5, one week after the accident, she said she found herself overcome by the fact he wouldn't be walking through her office door, ready with a hug.

"I just sat there at my desk and stared at the staircase," Bennett said.

Just the other day, she found a note he'd left that she hadn't noticed before posted to one her books.

It read simply: "Key'Maan was here," with a heart drawn on the bottom.

Liening In

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

The county of Humboldt is beginning the process of imposing $900,000 liens on a handful of properties whose owners have not responded to abatement and violation notices connected with cannabis cultivation.

Planning Director John Ford said the county's controversial code enforcement approach — which threatens fines of up to $10,000 a day on properties found out of compliance with the county's cannabis land use ordinance — is proving effective. Ford said the county has thus far used code enforcement to target unpermitted cannabis grows that haven't made any efforts to come into compliance.

"We do continue to identify illegal cultivation sites that aren't within the county permit system, that aren't within the state licensing system," he said. "They are basically producing cannabis that can only be sold in the illicit market."

Ford estimated that the county has sent out more than 600 notices of abatement and violation. Close to 200 of those, Ford said, have been addressed without a fine, with the owner either quickly agreeing to remove the grow entirely or entering into a compliance agreement with the county. Most of the rest, Ford said, have been resolved with a combination of a compliance agreement and a negotiated fine — generally in the neighborhood of $20,000 to $30,000.

From the county's perspective, Ford said, the fines are a consequence of people operating outside the law but the most important thing is addressing the underlying violation, whether it be a simple unpermitted grow or more entrenched grading and timber harvest violations. Property owners who have engaged the county in conversation early in the process have generally fared well, he said.

"The main focus is on resolving the violation," he said.

But that's proven a tremendous challenge with about 10 percent of the property owners, Ford said, who have simply not responded to the county's violation notices. In those cases, Ford said, fines accrue until they reach the maximum of $900,000, an amount that's roughly triple the county's median home value, according to the Humboldt County Economic Index. "The next step for those is to unfortunately impose a lien against the property," Ford said, adding that the county is currently preparing to take that step in fewer than 10 cases.

Some in the cannabis industry have decried the code enforcement approach, saying the fines are excessive and charging that the county's strategy doesn't seem to target the most egregious violators. Local Attorney Eugene Denson told the Times-Standard in September that the fines constitute "cruel and unusual" punishment and urged growers on the receiving end of the notices to lawyer up and challenge them.

There's a process for that, Ford said. Property owners can appeal a notice of violation or abatement, which then triggers a hearing before an administrative law judge, who hears the case and decides whether the alleged violation exists. (The county had been contracting with McGeorge School of Law to provide judges via video conferencing for the hearings but is now evaluating proposals from three different organizations to take over the contract.)

In each and every case that's been appealed, Ford said the judge has sided with the county.

"We wouldn't take something questionable to the administrative law judge," Ford said. "It's either a violation or it's not. It's either clear or it's not."

Though Ford said he feels the code enforcement system is working, there's clearly plenty of work to do. While law enforcement has estimated there are more than 12,000 large cannabis cultivation sites in Humboldt County, fewer than 2,000 are working toward compliance, meaning some 85 percent are in violation of county codes.

"I think the primary focus right now is to continue to reduce the number of illicit grow sites in Humboldt County," Ford said, adding that doing such will help both the environment and permitted growers. ●

APD Interim Chief: 'Unequivocal Physical Evidence' in Lawson Case

The Arcata Police Department is preparing to submit its investigation into the 2017 stabbing death of David Josiah Lawson to the Humboldt County District Attorney's Office by Nov. 9 and Interim Police Chief Richard Ehle says he thinks there is "unequivocal physical evidence" linking a specific suspect to Lawson's death.

Ehle declined to discuss the evidence or identify the suspect in an interview with the Journal.

"The more I discuss the case or the more I get into any specifics, the less inclined the DA is to charge this case," Ehle explained.

The interim chief said the investigative report stops short of making a charging recommendation to prosecutors in the case. But he said it will be "rather obvious" when prosecutors read through the case report, which walks them through DNA and fingerprint evidence and details the suspect's "motive, opportunity and means" to commit the crime.

Lawson, a 19-year-old Humboldt State University sophomore, was stabbed several times, including once to the heart, at an off-campus party in the early morning hours of April 15, 2017. A suspect — Kyle Zoellner of McKinleyville — was arrested at the scene and charged with Lawson's murder but the charges against him were dismissed several weeks later after a Humboldt County Superior Court judge found there was insufficient evidence to support them.

The case seemed to languish thereafter. Former Police Chief Tom Chapman and a former FBI agent brought in to consult on the case both resigned abruptly in April as the anniversary of the slaying approached. And Lawson's mother, Charmaine Lawson, filed a claim for damages — the first step toward filing a lawsuit against the city — around the same time, alleging that the police department had botched the investigation. (Zoellner has also filed a lawsuit against the city, alleging officers violated his civil rights by denying him medical attention and falsifying police reports following his arrest.)

But under Ehle, the department has brought in additional investigators, with the city devoting at least $100,000 in additional funding to aid the effort. News of the investigation nearing its conclusion was first reported by the Times-Standard's Dan Squier Oct. 31.

Journal attempts to reach Charmaine Lawson for comment on the recent developments have been unsuccessful. Ehle said he's kept the slain teen's mother in the loop as the investigation has moved forward.

Ehle also told the Journal that while there's been some clamoring in the community to see charges brought against a variety of individuals involved in a variety of physical altercations that night that proceeded and followed Lawson's stabbing, APD's investigation focused solely on Lawson's death.

"We're looking at the murder, almost exclusively," he said. "That's our primary focus."

Ehle said he and his investigative team hope to sit down with District Attorney Maggie Fleming by the end of the week to discuss the case. From there, prosecutors could opt to re-file charges against Zoellner, charge another suspect, deem charges aren't warranted or undertake further investigation.

Incumbents Cruise and McKinley Will Come Down in a Sanctuary County

Election Day turned out to be a pretty good one for Humboldt County incumbents.

In Eureka's first trip to the polls under its new true ward system, Councilmembers Kim Bergel and Natalie Arroyo fended off challengers to retain their seats, and they'll be joined by Leslie Castellano, who cruised to victory in a four-way race to represent Ward 1. Progressive candidate Susan Seaman, meanwhile, will be the city's next mayor, meaning sitting Councilmember Heidi Messner, who'd thrown her hat in the mayoral showdown, will retain her Ward 2 seat.

To the west, incumbent Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District Commissioner Richard Marks easily retained his Fourth Division seat, fending off a challenge from outgoing Eureka City Councilmember Marian Brady.

In Ferndale, sitting Councilmember Patrick Sweeney cruised to victory in the city's mayoral race. McKinleyville, meanwhile, saw all three incumbents reelected to seats on the McKinleyville Community Services District board. Results in Trinidad were mixed and way too close to call, with four candidates separated by just six votes in the final election night tally as they vie for three open council seats.

In Arcata, incumbents Sofia Pereira and Brett Watson sailed to re-election. Meanwhile, another city incumbent — the statue of President William McKinley at the center of the Arcata Plaza — lost a bid on his behalf to block the city council's February vote to remove his likeness from the city center. (Historical footnote: City voters' rejection of the bid to save the statue came exactly 118 years to the day after McKinley was reelected president, a victory that came just about a year before his assassination in 1901.)

Speaking of ballot measures, Measure K, which sought to make Humboldt a "sanctuary county" by prohibiting county employees from working with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, stumbled in the early returns but support grew as the night went on until the final election night tally had it holding a slim lead with 51.56 percent of the vote. Meanwhile, Measure O cruised to passage with 71.94 percent of the vote, meaning county residents will continue paying a 0.5 percent sales tax to fund county services until they pass another ballot measure reversing the decision.

Voters also passed school bond measures in Cutten and the Northern Humboldt Union High School District, as well as a hotel tax in Blue Lake, but rejected a tax to fund road repairs in Eureka and a sales tax aimed at bolstering Rio Dell's general fund.

Check out a full breakdown of local results here and visit www.northcoastjournal.com to relive election night as it unfolded.

THREE HUMBOLDT TRANS PEOPLE ON THE FIGHT TO BE THEMSELVES

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jenn@northcoastjournal.com

Photographs by León Villagómez

On Oct. 21, the New York Times reported that the Trump administration had begun circulating a memo outlining its plan to roll back the federal government's definition of gender to an unchangeable at-birth designation of either male or female. This legal definition, which would be applied to Title IX civil rights protections against gender discrimination in schools and workplaces, would effectively void transgender and non-binary Americans' self determination and their ability to seek recourse when discriminated against.

A recent study by the Williams Institute estimates 1.4 million Americans — 0.6 percent of the population — identify as transgender. If that percentage holds true in our county, it pencils out to some 820 trans folks living locally.

To better understand the potential impact of this major shift, we asked a trio of trans Humboldt residents to share their perspectives in their own words. The LGBTQ community in Humboldt, like the North Coast at large, is not a monolith and the views of these three individuals are exactly that — three unique voices among a diverse population.

My Journey to Becoming an Average Guy

By Colin Harris

If you had told me when I was a child that I would grow up to be the man that I am today, I wouldn't have believed you. I never thought I could be this happy in my body, doing the conservation work that I love, surrounded by supportive friends and family. It feels like a dream come true and I keep expecting to wake up from it.

But there are times when that dream feels like a nightmare. To turn on the TV and see a news anchor describing transgender people like myself as mentally ill, delusional and dangerous to the rest of the population is a surreal experience, and to have our rights threatened by a government that is supposed to represent and protect all Americans is very upsetting. You wouldn't be able to tell me apart from any other guy walking on the street, yet I am being told who I am by people who have never met me or spoken to me. The transgender community is as diverse as any other community; we cannot all be painted with the same brush. What unites us all, however, is our drive to be our most authentic selves, no matter what obstacles we have to overcome.

The hardest obstacle for me to face was the fear that by coming out as transgender, I would be ostracizing myself from the people I cared most about. This fear kept me in the closet for a long time, trying my best to ignore my internal struggle and be happy in the body I was born into. Because there was very little trans representation in the media, I had no words to describe how I was feeling or what the cause was. For a long time I thought I was just mildly depressed, or that my ADHD was to blame for my discomfort in social situations. But neither of those things explained why I was always a man in my dreams, or why it felt so right to roleplay as male in video games and online.

After graduating from Humboldt State

Colin Harris

University at the age of 22 and returning from a month-long class studying reptiles and amphibians in Panama, I came to the realization that something in my life needed to change. I started researching my symptoms and came upon the term gender dysphoria, something I had never heard of before. It is the distress a person feels when their biological sex does not match their gender identity, or sense of self. This was my eureka moment — it explained so much about my past and the way I had always felt different than others. I immediately sought out therapy and my therapist agreed that hormone replacement therapy was the best course of action to bridge the disconnect between my mind and body.

My friends and family were shocked, and they feared how my quality of life would be affected by this realization. I assured them that this was my only option to find true happiness and that the treatment was safe and could be stopped at any time. My siblings were the most supportive and not as surprised as I had expected. I was still the same person that I had always been, I was just going to look a bit different.

I started my transition while working for the California Conservation Corps, an organization that works diligently to conserve our lands and native species while developing the state's youth to become more confident and productive members of society. This program proved an accepting environment, and I finally felt comfortable enough to be open about my trans identity and to live life full-time as male. Every month after starting testosterone, I began to feel better and better about myself. I quickly went from looking like a butch female in my early 20s to a 13-year-old boy, which was very strange but funny at times. My crew became my second family and their support was crucial during that difficult first year.

Now at 25 I finally look my age, I have an amazing job as a fisheries technician and my family and I are closer than ever before. My trans identity has been pushed to the back of my mind, no more important to me than the many other aspects that make up my personality. My past may differ from most but I'm just an average guy who enjoys the outdoors, painting, Netflix and dancing with friends. I have never been happier with my reflection and I have found a sense of internal peace that was worth all of the challenges I faced.

Because I now feel so secure in my identity, I want to use my voice to help my trans siblings who are not as fortunate. Those that identify as non-binary (neither totally male nor female), trans people of color, transwomen, trans people with disabilities and trans people who don't "pass" as their gender in society all face additional dangers and stigmas that have a negative impact on their mental and physical health. I believe that all people, no matter what they look like or what their views are, deserve equal rights and representation. That is the America I want to live in and it starts with each one of us making an effort to respect those around us and learn from each other. Our differences don't have to divide us; they can make us stronger and wiser than a cookie-cutter society could ever be.

That is the challenge I will leave you with: Try opening your mind and your heart to the things that you don't understand. You may be surprised by what you learn and the friends you make.

The Cost of Fighting for Your Rights

By Aydan Ash Tillett

Sunday, Oct. 21 was another day marked by gut punches, tears, questions and raised blood pressure for trans and non-binary people across America.

As a trans/non-binary person myself, I have become quite used to wincing when opening social media. It is a constant in my life and, I'm sure, the life of many trans/non-binary individuals across America.

Although this country has made many strides toward more education and rights for trans individuals, we still have such a long way to go. This means that trans/non-binary people still live in fear every day. They fear for their lives, their health, their well-being, their ability to provide for themselves and if they suffer from any kind of social anxiety then they fear being the most conspicuous person in the crowd, at the very least.

Contrary to popular belief, coming out in general, much less for trans people, is not an automatic one-way ticket to queer paradise. As liberating and exhilarating as it is to realize and begin to live one's truth, it is also very sobering to realize that you are essentially deciding to put a huge bullseye on your back for all insecure and uneducated toxic men.

I'm sure that a lot of this is not a shock to you. If you have any inclination toward social media then I am sure that some of this has already been explained, proclaimed or at least been introduced to you. So what I would like to bring to your attention is a recent experience I have been having with society, at large, and individuals in my social circle.

I am a trans woman. I was assigned male at birth but I identify as female, mostly. I do tend to exist beyond the binary and really don't sign up for all the labels that society has created for gender and gender roles. It's all a fantasy that we live within to trick ourselves into thinking there is some kind of "order." But that is an entirely different article.

I came out as a trans woman in January of this year (2018). With the current political climate being what it is I have been hearing a lot of "it's time to stand up and fight more (harder)." I've also been told that a lot of the things and people that I am afraid of are — or are being perpetuated by — "bullies" that probably wouldn't actually do anything if I (trans people) stood up to them and fought back.

Sounds good, right? Well, let me point out a few of the things wrong with this perspective. First, I just want to state how asinine the concept our society has encouraged that it is always a victim's responsibility to right the wrong they have experienced. It is very much victim blaming. Taking the responsibility to change the act of abusers and putting it onto their victims. It is also coming from a place of privilege. These statements were made to me by people who, admittedly, had not experienced any kind of abuse or trauma as a trans person but yet seemed to know the solution to the abuse and trauma that myself and all other trans folk experience everyday.

Now, I am not implying that those statements are incorrect. It is a time to fight back, fight harder and educate more. But when a cis (usually male) is telling a trans person (woman in my case) that they need to "fight back (harder, more)" against the people that are a direct threat to their life, it is not only wrong but quite insulting!

Let me explain why.

Trans people, particularly women, are in direct risk of violence and murder every single day simply for being trans. According to an article published by the Human Rights Campaign, there were 23 trans individuals murdered in 2016 and 29 in 2017. That is the reality that every trans person lives with every single day. According to the same source, there have already been 22 murders of trans people in 2018.

In addition to these staggering facts, many trans people suffer severe mental health issues often stemming from abuse of all types (mental, physical, sexual, etc.), body dysmorphia and dysphoria, rejection, abandonment, suicidal ideation and many more. Many trans people don't have much of, if any, support at all. Often being rejected by their family and not quite fitting in with the "straight" or queer community. So, just existing is a struggle and a daily victory for them. That is our reality.

So when people tell us that we need to do more, fight harder, stand up and fight back, as much as we want to it often isn't even an option for us. If we take on the extra stress and trauma that challenging society would bring and the added risk that making ourselves even more visible would cause it could be very damaging to us psychologically, mentally and even physically.

So the next time you want to tell your trans/non-binary friend that they need to stop being so scared and fight back please remember that if they are even existing and living anywhere near their truth that they are already fighting back. Often much harder than you or even they realize sometimes.

So instead, fight harder for them if you can and then offer to help them do what they can and validate them for their existence and help us all to enjoy another day as ourselves and hopefully one more step toward a brighter future.

Who Gets to Define Us

By Carmen Lopez

Reportedly, the Trump administration wants to redefine the legal definition of sex to significantly narrow the definition of gender under Title IX, a federal civil rights program. This new proposed definition of gender aims to make things more “clear cut” and “easily defined” by determining the sex of someone based on their genitals at birth. “Sex means a person’s status as male or female based on immutable biological traits identifiable by or before birth,” the Department of Health and Human Services proposed in the memo, according to The New York Times. The memo further states that “The sex listed on a person’s birth certificate, as originally issued, shall constitute definitive proof of a person’s sex unless rebutted by reliable genetic evidence.”

Immediately there are several notable issues with the department’s proposal, the first and most concerning is, of course, redefining words that already are clearly defined and going against decades of scientific research and definitions the medical community has already established. The second issue is the blatant attempt to take away civil rights from the people who will be erased out of existence from this amendment in Title IX. Any attempt at removing civil liberties should be looked at askance, no matter who it’s from or why. Everybody deserves to feel safe and our country has, in the past, been very progressive when making sure this is the case. This would be the third attempt by the Trump administration to target the trans community with regressive demands, following its failed ban on transgender military personnel and Attorney General Jeff Sessions’ memo stating that Title VII protections against workplace discrimination don’t include transgender people.

I’ve maintained my silence when it comes to this issue and many others in politics, but I can’t stand by and hope that someone else will do my speaking for me. My reality is that as an Afro-Latina transwoman who lives here in America, this is the chance that I get to put things into perspective for people. There are roughly 308 million people in this country. Roughly. Of those, roughly 42 million are black. The systemic abuses against this population are palpable despite a civil rights movement in which people stood with us to ensure that we had basic human rights. We barely succeeded. Black people in America, especially those who lived through those times, will still tell you just how difficult this fight was and the kinds of terrible things that had to occur before enough people said, “This is not OK and we have to be better.” That struggle goes on to this day.

There are 1.4 million trans people in America. Roughly. This means that our voices are outnumbered almost 300 to 1 and, while my math isn’t stellar, I would hope that the point has been illustrated. We transpeople and intersex folks of America are at even more of a disadvantage when it comes to gaining the trust of the general public and hoping that they can see how we are just people who want to exist and live our lives with the same protections and safety as any other group of people. That they can see we are suffering disproportionate violence, rape and murder.

At the end of the day this decision will be made behind closed doors without the consent of the American people. The memo stated changes would go into effect at the end of the year, as noted in the article from The New York Times, without opportunity for public comment beforehand. This is the sad truth. Because the voice of the people targeted by this radical redefinition — our voice — is so small that it won’t matter. That the plight of 1.4 million people wasn’t even worthy of being put on a ballot for the other 300 million Americans to vote on. Even if it had been, we would have been outnumbered 300 to 1 and people who may not understand us — or even people who hate us — would be the ones deciding our fates for us.

No matter what Title IX protections anyone takes away from us — even those who hate us or wish that we’d just disappear — we would never stand by and allow someone else to steal your rights. Never.

Usually I'm more than excited when a fellow Southeast Asian has won an award for culinary prowess but, this time around, I wasn't amused. Humboldt residents, you voted for a Cambodian restaurant to win the North Coast Journal's Best Chinese Restaurant award. Anthony Bourdain is probably rolling in his grave right now. China and Cambodia each have their own unique historical, political, social, environmental, economic, cultural practices and traditions in food. The Khmer people, another term for Cambodians, do have rice as their staple but it is one of few things they have in common with the Chinese, other than the continent they share. I don't even want to start on how many different types of regional cuisine China offers. That said, I'm still pretty excited to know there is a huge fanbase for Annie's Cambodian Cuisine. For those who didn't know, Annie Chau and her husband, Chin, were once the owners of Happy Donuts. Yes, that drive-thru doughnut shop near the Winco and CVS in Eureka. It didn't have the rowdy post-bar crawling crowds and disco ball lighting of a late-night trip to Don's Donuts, and I can only speak knowledgeably about that period, but if the shops were compared solely on doughnut merit, Happy Donuts circa 2005 would've won. Fight me on that.

I spent so many days sitting back on those slick booth seats, under the glare of your typical doughnut shop fluorescent lights, watching the doughnut-making and purchases. I still remember checking on the dough cut-outs proofing in the back, watching the workers glaze each freshly fried treat and memorizing all the regulars' orders. Chin would occasionally let me watch him fry the doughnuts or add a sprinkle here and there, and, of course, I was allowed to have all the doughnuts and hot chocolate a teenager could ever possibly want. Why would a teenager spend all of her time after school at a doughnut shop, might you ask? Well, my mother and father worked double shifts during my late high school years so I was left in the care of Annie and Chin during the evening. The Southeast Asian community in Eureka was small, so we all knew each other and helped out in times of need, which mostly meant taking care of each other's children.

Being in the shop and home of Annie and Chin led to learning about the types of food that Cambodian families ate at home. A lot of the dishes are quite similar to the Lao cuisine I know, with its use of a similar fermented fish condiment. Prahok, a fermented fish paste, is the go-to condiment for adding flavor in Cambodian cuisine because of its strong fish essence and saltiness. As an ode to Cambodian cuisine, Annie, Chin and my parents, I took a traditional Cambodian dish and adapted it to cha traop dot, an eggplant dish that was a favorite at my family's now defunct Eureka restaurant Hue Southeast Asian Cuisine. I wanted to make this dish easier to cook at home so I've found some substitutes you can find at your local market and given the recipe flexibility to adjust to your own needs or taste. Even Safeway offers fish sauce and lemongrass now so don't skimp on those.

Smoked Eggplant and Stir-Fried Pork (Cha Traop Dot)

You'll need a broiler, gas stove or some sort of open flame to smoke the eggplant. Open a window. Serves 4.

Ingredients:

- 4-5 Japanese eggplants or any thin eggplants, washed and dried
- ½ pound ground pork
- ¼ pound chopped shrimp (shrimp should be peeled, deveined and cleaned)
- 2 tablespoons oil (any oil with a high

- smoke point, such as grapeseed or peanut oil, works great)
- 2 tablespoons palm, brown or turbinado sugar
- 4-5 cloves of garlic, roughly chopped
- ½-inch stalk of lemongrass, finely minced
- 1 bird's eye chili, finely chopped (or more if you can tolerate spice)
- 1 tablespoon fish sauce or 1 teaspoon prahok or anchovy paste.
- 1 teaspoon oyster sauce or soy sauce.
- ¼ cup chicken stock or coconut milk for sauce
- 7-8 sprigs of cilantro, chopped, for garnish
- Salt and black pepper, to taste

Heat your oven to 350 F.

Over an open flame or under a broiler, char your eggplants 2-3 minutes on each side. Then, place the eggplants in a baking pan, cover them in foil and roast them in the oven for 15 minutes. The eggplant is done when it's soft, with skin that sinks in when pressed and translucent flesh.

In a wok or large frying pan over medium-high heat, pour in the oil. Add the pork, breaking up the ground meat into smaller pieces, and let it brown. Add the garlic, lemongrass, chiles and sugar, and keep stirring so it's fully coated with the sugar.

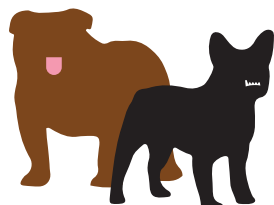

Toss in the shrimp and give the pan a light stir, careful not to break down or overwork the shrimp. Add the fish sauce or paste and oyster sauce, stirring to deglaze the pan. Add 2 tablespoons of chicken stock or coconut milk to create a sauce, adding more until you have the desired amount of gravy.

Place eggplant on a plate to serve. Peeling the purple outer skin is optional but I love the color variation to the dish so I keep it on. Using a paring knife, make a slit lengthwise from the top of the eggplant to the bottom, so that it exposes the delicate flesh of the vegetable. Fill the opening with the stir-fried pork and spoon over the gravy. Salt and pepper the dish to taste and add cilantro garnish before serving over rice. It's highly recommended to enjoy this meal while listening to vintage Cambodian psychedelic surf rock and researching where Cambodia is on the globe.

'This is the Land We Dream of, the Land that Belongs to Us Again'

Brando Skyhorse's
The Madonnas of Echo Park

By Cassie Curatolo
cassie@northcoastjournal.com

This week author Brando Skyhorse visits several locations in Humboldt County for a pair of readings and discussions. Skyhorse's first work, Take this Man: A Memoir, in which he recounts the quirks and the tragedies of his childhood in Los Angeles, generated much praise. His first novel, The Madonnas of Echo Park, is the 2018 College of the Redwoods and Humboldt State University Book of the Year. It received the 2011 PEN/Hemingway Award and the Sue Kaufman Prize for First Fiction from the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

The Madonnas of Echo Park paints a picture of Los Angeles that is both loving and critical, honest and embellished, heartbreaking and hopeful. The novel offers snapshots of the Mexican and Mexican-American working class in Echo Park, a stretch of the Los Angeles basin that was once a backlot for silent movies before film production migrated to Hollywood. Now experiencing gentrification and the exodus of the ethnic groups that called it home for so long, Echo Park has lived many lives — not unlike Skyhorse's characters over the course of the novel.

Skyhorse employs several narrators with wholly different voices, backgrounds, social and economic statuses, motivations, desires and morals to construct a patchwork story. Felicia, for instance, is a cleaning lady and mother whose daughter is nearly caught in the crossfire of a drive-by shooting. The child who does die, rechristened "Baby Madonna," is immortalized on a mural in Echo Park. Felicia describes her line of work as both "intimate and invisible," but at one point strikes up a short, tragic friendship with one of the wealthy white women who employ her. Manny Mendoza Jr. is an aging ex-gang member and ex-con who has become introspective. He laments the breakup of his son and his Vietnamese girlfriend Tran (who his son dates against his Chicana mother's wishes), and the multiracial grandchildren they might have borne him. He worries about his son, who will soon be deployed overseas with the U.S. Army. Hector is an undocumented day laborer with no memory of Mexico. He is paid off by his foreman when he witnesses the murder of another employee on the jobsite and risks being deported if he turns him in to authorities. In a poignant and powerful twist on a "six degrees of separation" plot, the lives of Skyhorse's characters collide over several generations, revealing the ways in which they are bound together, not only through the struggle to survive and assimilate to (white) American society but more specifically the ways in which they are bound through place. Echo Park becomes fabric on which their common thread is embroidered, the backdrop that both necessitates and propels their actions.

Of course, like the stories of so many ethnic "others," The Madonnas of Echo Park is also a study of the ways in which identity is always in flux and belonging is always at stake. Skyhorse masterfully illustrates the illusive, yet permeable lines between insider and outsider, as his characters, at times, shed their ethnic heritage in order to fully embrace American culture, which is for many the culture they were born to inherit. Other times, they manage to blend multiple identities in a way that feels most authentic. They navigate the various neighborhoods of Los Angeles in the same way they navigate the ever-moving boundaries of cultural and ethnic belonging: sometimes selfishly, out of necessity, in pursuit of reinvention, but always with both caution and bravery. ●

Brando Skyhorse will read and discuss his work on Thursday, Nov. 8, at 3:30 p.m. in the Native American Forum (BSS 162) at Humboldt State University. Meet the author for book signing at 2:30 p.m. in the BSS lobby. Skyhorse will also speak on Friday, Nov. 9, at 7:00 p.m. in the Performing Arts Theater at College of the Redwoods. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. Both events are free and open to the public, and copies of the book will be available for purchase on site.

Ultra Marine

Jessie Vala's exhibition Object ^ Time ^ Conduit
at Reese Bullen Gallery

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Multimedia artist Jessie Vala transformed Humboldt State University's Reese Bullen Gallery for her new exhibition, turning the white cube into a blue sculpture grotto. The Eugene, Oregon-based Vala replaced the usual gallery spotlights with blue lamps, bathing viewers in azure light for an oddly calming effect. The marine implications of all this blueness are reinforced by the matched videos looping silently on the back wall — Greco-Roman looking vessels and ancient masks appear submerged through candy-colored filters, intermittently obscured by rafts of bubbles.

Within this unfamiliar blue space, white sculptures grouped in clusters sprout pale blue neon tubes. There are about a dozen of these smooth, complex forms, half of them occupying pedestals, the rest positioned atop low columns. White, unglazed stoneware surfaces recall both fondant and marble. Some sculptures rest on a plexiglass trivet that refracts light laterally in neon blue or, in one striking case, lime green.

These wafer-thin panels of color glow in the blue gloom, enhancing the pallor of the stoneware forms atop them. Blue squares refract the room's ambient light, while the green one bids to fool the eye — the light it refracts comes from a hidden source within the pedestal itself. This characteristic flourish comes across as playful, even as it draws attention to its making.

Vala's sculptures are vertical, symmetrical and modular, with added formal units creating visual complexity. Neon tubing bursts from unfired stoneware forms at regular intervals, emitting an ice-blue light that casts a cold glow on your face and clothing if you stand up close.

One family of forms is based on the stacking of teapot-like vessel shapes in various sizes, another on the branching of hollow pipes from a central trunk. These works resemble overgrown candelabras, trophies or chalices. Sculptures in both groups overflow looping forms radiating out like conduits from a central core. Details, like the gold paint Vala uses according to the dictates of some obscure logic to highlight occasional bits of surface, are unexpected.

The chalice-like objects, some of which appear to have been topped with mutant Tesla coils, vaguely suggest re-imagined ritual vessels from ancient civilizations. They rest atop rough slabs of gray stone that are themselves supported by white columns — architectural elements that evoke the classical civilizations of Greece and Rome. A famous work of ancient Sumerian art, the strikingly abstracted "Mask of Warka," appears in both videos. Its presence brings the ancient Near East into the mix of historical reference points.

These objects, too elaborate to conform to a critique of functionality, are clearly intended for ceremonial use. Many of them seem to celebrate water's flow. Vessels are ornamented with stylized teardrops that fall in diagonal pairs. One has a pair of twined swans' necks growing out of the top. Towers of branching faucets arranged like multi-tiered fountains evoke dreams of liquid superabundance. The preoccupation with flow, not limited to liquids, extends to gas and perhaps to ether as well; the neon arcs that complete many stoneware circuits seem like plausible conduits for alternating currents.

The zaniest piece here is also the exhibition's only human figure. It's a bust-length portrait of a long-necked, lion-maned goddess with twinned neon beams shooting out of her eyes and arcing into a vessel placed before her. This campy play on the gaze prompts giggles, even as it sends up archetypal figures including Iris (the ancient Greeks' messenger goddess, who traveled the rainbow's arc between earth and sky) and Medusa (whose petrifying glance turned men to stone).

Perusing the installation is like opening your eyes to a visual playlist that puts the terms mentioned in the exhibition title (objects, time, conduits) on shuffle. The open-ended relationships between them is part of the works' appeal. Ancient-world reference points blur together, producing a feeling of historical past as vague as it is seductive. We are vastly removed from the ancient Greeks and Sumerians in most ways, but we are just like them in our need for water, our dependence on nature's bounty and our ability to ensure the supply of either largely limited to symbolic gestures.

The ultramarine light that saturates the space exerts a strangely calming effect and, as bizarre as Vala's florid, hyper-linked forms may appear, their recuperative intent is palpable. Really, contemplating objects that celebrate the completion of circuits, the removal of blockages and the principle of unimpeded flow is not the worst thing we could do with our time. ●

November Soundtrack

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

We are definitely into November, the 11th month of the year, helpfully named after the ninth month of the old Roman Calendar.

Of course, it has had many other names throughout history. One of my favorites is Brumaire, the so-called “month of fog” in the argot of the French Revolution. On Nov. 9, 1799, came the Coup of 18 Brumaire, a largely theatrical sleight-of-hand by Napoleon Bonaparte and Co. that unofficially ended the French Revolution and started the continental conquest that would engulf Europe until the Congress of Vienna in November of 1814. Where am I headed with this? Well, November seems to historically be a time of radical political change (I am not even going into Guy Fawkes because those masks being co-opted by the most annoying fringes of internet culture have eclipsed the usefulness of a brief discussion of his legacy). And as you read this you have the benefit of knowing what change — if any — the midterm elections have garnered for our troubled society. Depending upon how fucked we presently are, I would like you all to remember one thing about Novembers past and present: Meaningful change doesn't always come from the ballot box alone. Sometimes it comes from the wellsprings of popular expression and collective desire. Keep an ear open this week.

And, as always, be kind and look out for each other on the dancefloor.

Thursday

Since the Joan Baez show is sold out and since not everyone who reads this column is a baby boomer, here's a younger funk show to warm up your Thursday night. Sebastopol's Burnside is touring with fellow Sonoma County mamma jammies Black Sheep Brass Band for a tour that lands on the stage of The Jam tonight at 9:30 p.m. ($10). Portland players Dirty Revival fill out the bill for an evening of hip swaying.

Friday

Die//Fam is a Portland band with Humboldt roots, being one of the numerous Jane Lee Hooker plays the Alibi at 11 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 17.

Courtesy of the artists

“Ellis bands” fronted by former Arcata musical gadfly Ellis Wallace. Tonight they play an all-ages show at Blondies at 8 p.m. with Berkeley's pop punk brats Adult School ($5).

An hour later at The Logger Bar, you can find a free-for-all rock show when Blood Hunny and The Bandage team up with Monster Women for a lo-fi freakout.

Saturday

SquarPeg is a different kind of quartet. With members ranging in provenance from the Eureka Symphony to the European Jazz circuit to Bengal music venues, this group has a mission statement aimed at making chamber music for the 21st century. For only $10 you can experience that sound live at the Fortuna Monday Club at 7:30 p.m. I suspect this show will be pretty special.

Later tonight at the Alibi, a number of very talented women roll out their tunes under the guise of two very different but complementary bands. New York City's Jane Lee Hooker is first and foremost a blues band with the window dressings of a vintage British Invasion band informing its sound. Meanwhile, Beaux Cheveux is a duo made up of Zepparella's drummer Clementine and Adrian from Hell's Belles playing a twangy blissed-out sort of pop music. Just $5 gets you in the door, 11 p.m. is the time to be there.

Sunday

History will show that I am fond of repping matinee performances on Sunday. This has a lot to do with my desire to include at least one recommended show for the whole family during peak hours per column, a goal of which I often fall short. But this Sunday I am in the zone, as I am heartily endorsing the 2 p.m. performance of the North Coast Repertory Theatre's run of The 25th Annual Putnam County Spelling Bee. This popular modern work has already joined the canon of modern musical theater so bring your crew at $20 a chair for a fun romp.

Monday

Known for a multidimensional approach to storytelling and songwriting, as well as a highly regarded NPR Tiny Desk Concert, New York's Florist is a gentle trio of talented writers who want to entertain you. They are appearing at the Outer Space tonight at 7 p.m. ($7). Joining in is the have-to-be-seen synth/wizard/ninja act Doctor Foxmeat — accompanied by the talented DJ Subzero — and promising young folk artist Hollan.

Tuesday

DJ Goldylocks spins the background sounds for a free spoken-word event at Northtown Coffee in Arcata brought to you by the folks in the Word Humboldt collective. Featured artist Alyx Muro anchors this event which begins at 6 p.m.

Wednesday

The Mad River Brewery Tasting Room offers another installment of Pints for Nonprofits. This week's beneficiary is none other than the Blue Lake Museum. The band is banjo/guitar/bass trio The Spindrifters. The audience can be you if you choose to roll by after 6 p.m. (free). ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Collin Yeo doesn't do this often but he requests that those of you who do that sort of thing to consider his brother's beloved dog Arrow in your prayers. He is a good boy who is in a bad way through age and no fault of his own or his owner's. May he have a speedy recovery.

Calendar

Nov. 8 – 15, 2018

Submitted

Gettin' twiggy with it. The Fig Twig Market, the place for cool, retro holiday shopping focusing on home decor, handmade and vintage items, comes to the Humboldt County Fairgrounds on Friday, Nov. 9 from 4 to 9 p.m. and Saturday, Nov. 10 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. ($7 Friday, $3 Saturday).

No Pardon. Submitted.

Celebrate EPIC's 41 years of environmental activism at the EPIC Fall Celebration on Saturday, Nov. 10 from 6 to 10 p.m. at Beginnings Octagon ($50 dinner, awards and music, $20 awards/music only). Enjoy toe-tappin' fiddle tunes by No Pardon, dinner by Sue's Organics and a sweet silent auction with all proceeds going to forest protection.

Self portrait by Morris Graves. Submitted.

Dell'Arte's Joan Schirle and company present Bird of the Inner Eye, a theatrical reading of painter and long-time Humboldt resident Morris Graves' personal letters on Thursday, Nov. 15, from 7 to 8:15 p.m. at Dell'Arte's Carlo Theatre (suggested donation $5 - $10). The show also plays at 7 p.m. on Nov. 17 at Black Faun Gallery and Sunday, Nov. 25 at the Arcata Playhouse.

Thank You for Your Service

November is National Gratitude month — a time when we celebrate Thanksgiving, exercise our right to vote in a free democracy and thank those whose military service to our country ensures we enjoy these very things. This Veterans Day, tip your hat to service members at one of these local events.

Rotary Club of Southwest Eureka in partnership with the city of Eureka presents the Veterans Day Observance and Program on Sunday, Nov. 11 from 11 a.m. to noon at Adorni Recreation Center (free). This program honors all who have served in the military and U.S. Merchant Marines and commemorates the 100th anniversary of the end of World War I.

In Fortuna, the Veterans Day Tribute takes place on Sunday, Nov. 11 from 2 to 3 p.m. at Fortuna Veterans Hall/Memorial Building (free). The 14th annual tribute features Casey Stephens, retired sergeant, who'll be talking about PTSD. Stick around for the color guard, patriotic songs and refreshments.

The Sequoia Park Zoo is offering free admission to honor vets at the Veterans Day at the Zoo on Monday, Nov. 12, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. There will be a kids' coloring competition with winning entries published in the Times-Standard and services tables for veterans.

And the Humboldt Bay Brass Band is performing its final concert ever on Saturday, Nov. 10 at 8 p.m. in Fulkerson Recital Hall ($10, $5 seniors and kids, free for HSU students with ID), featuring an arrangement of U.S. service songs in honor of Veterans Day.

Please thank a veteran at one of these events. You never know if somebody hasn't heard the words, "Thank you for your service."

Make Mine Strange

Raise your glass and say "cheers!" Strangebrew Beerfest is back for another round on Saturday, Nov. 10 at 6 p.m. at the Eureka Theater ($35).

The annual festival, now in its 11th year, is a fundraiser for the ongoing restoration of the historic Eureka Theater. So what makes it strange? Here's the hops: Local breweries and cider makers are tasked with creating wild, wacky drinks all vying for awards and glory. This year, Humboldt Cider Co., Mad River Brewing Co., Six Rivers Brewery, Eel River Brewery, Redwood Curtain Brewery, The Booth, Founders and the Humboldt Homebrewers will challenge your wild side with unusual offerings. But don't fear the beers. This is the most fun you've had trying something new since, well, Strangebrew 10.

The Point's Classic Cover Contest will keep things rocking and sloshing all night. The station celebrates its 12th anniversary this year so wish the team a happy birthday. And when the time comes to steady yourself, step outside the theater for real-deal barbecue served up by Southside Mike's, along with great eats from Humboldt Hot Dogs. Be sure to line up a designated driver, dial up a car service or book a room at the Eureka Inn (within stumbling distance of the theater).

Grab a fistful of pretzels, your pals and your sea legs, and come out to the theater for a night of fermented fun. It's going down.

The Boys and the Band

Beautiful Boy and Bohemian Rhapsody

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

BEAUTIFUL BOY. The truism that addiction is no laughing matter is apparently and unfortunately not lost on concurrent father and son memoirists David and Nic Sheff, nor on Luke Davies and Felix van Groeningen, who adapted those memoirs into a screenplay that the latter went on to direct. The end result of all that, Beautiful Boy, tests its audience's aversion to sentimentality so frequently and forcefully that, despite some moments of near-transcendence, it leaves one feeling talked at, rather than having been an intimate witness to something both mundane and devastating, all-encompassing but sadly routine and usually invisible.

David (Steve Carell), the elder Sheff, has a son named Nic (Timothée Chalamet) with his first wife Vicki (Amy Ryan). He has settled in a rustic-chic rural Marin house, remarried to painter Karen Barbur (Maura Tierney), with whom he has a set of young twins. It's a good life, from the look of it, made possible by David's success as a freelance writer and shored up by the loving relationships at the heart of it. By all indications David is a completely devoted father and manages the tenuous balance of being both parent and friend to Nic with aplomb. And so, as his oldest child transitions from adolescence into adulthood, simultaneously drawing away from their shared pastimes and into himself, David is troubled but willing to cede some territory to the process of growing up.

Before long, though, Nic is vanishing from home for days at a time, returning shaking and sunken-eyed, refusing to interact. It's the beginning of a prolonged and painful — for all parties — cycle of depression, mania, disengagement, clarity, relapse and repeat that almost everybody can recognize. Nic has found drugs — methamphetamine in particular, with heroin as a stand-in when necessary — or drugs have found him, depending on one's sensibilities. And because Nic's psychology and biochemistry are so well-suited to the effects of those compounds, he is profoundly unable to “experiment” or use them in moderation. Instead, he tumbles rapidly into addiction before high school graduation. He's in and out of recovery, including a stint that delays his college matriculation and eventually he's in the wind.

This story is a helpful, hopeful one, or at least I repeat that to myself to combat the dominant notion that a well-known writer not only got his own account of his son's struggles published but the son's version as well; color me cynical. Whether or not the motive for telling this story was opportunistic, I think people in the real world can benefit from it. Nic beat the odds, at least so far, even after his beleaguered but always loving father had to let him go and hope he bounced when he hit the bottom. And I think there is a compelling new take on that story to be told but Beautiful Boy, despite strong but sometimes too-strong performances by its leads, is not it. It'll extract tears from much of the audience but so will a well-made after-school special. R. 120M. BROADWAY.

BOHEMIAN RHAPSODY. Whether or not one likes the music of Queen, it is inarguable that it had a sound very much its own and lead singer Freddie Mercury had one of the most distinctive voices in rock and roll. Ever. Period. Full stop. That's a fact and that the story of this band and its iconoclastic, pioneering front man is worthy of the biopic treatment is another. That said, this attempt by director Bryan Singer (who may, in the final tally, go down as one of the great villains of contemporary Hollywood, given the trail of sexual misconduct charges that follows him, but that's another story), for all its energy and lavish trappings, leaves me thinking of all the things I didn't see onscreen, of the story left untold.

The movie takes an unsurprising, linear approach to its subject: Freddie (Rami Malek), né Farrokh Bulsara to Parsi parents eventually settled in London, feels unsuited to the confines of a conventional life. He's ambitious and flamboyant and a talented singer, and these attributes land him a gig singing with a borderline successful pub band. That band will of course become the arena act called Queen and he will become one of the biggest celebrities in the world. That process, or at least how it’s presented here, will surprise no one. It’s triumph and tragedy writ large, with Freddie becoming enamored of his own stardom, prey to influencers, the definition of hubris humbled by life. There’s truth in it but I can’t help feeling like there’s something missing.

When someone uses “literally” correctly.
Beautiful Boy

Malek’s performance is fairly mesmerizing: He chews the scenery with his formidable chompers but so did the man he’s playing. But the rest of the band are barely given identities and seem present mainly to act as collective foil to the star. I must admit that the live-show recreations — including the band’s complete Live Aid set — are exhilarating but, for all their joy and energy, they also highlight the lack thereof elsewhere in the story. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF CHRISTINE ANN JOHAN- NESSEN CASE NO. PRI80254

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of CHRISTINE ANN JOHANNESSEN, CHRISTINE A. JOHANNESSEN, AND CHRISTINE JOHANNESSEN A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner TINA M. KING In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that TINA M. KING be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on November 29, 2018 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property.
You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorders office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed or trust on the property.
NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER:
The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 844-477-7869, or visit this internet Web site

T.S.# 83124. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. CALI-

The street address and other common designation, if any, of the real property described above is purported to be: 2360 AUSTIN ST EUREKA, CALIFORNIA 95503 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address and other common designation, if any, shown herein. Said sale will be held, but without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title, possession, condition, or encumbrances, including fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust, to pay the remaining principal sums of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust. The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is: $93,927.24 If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. The beneficiary under said Deed of Trust heretofore executed and delivered to the undersigned a written Declaration of Default and Demand for Sale, and a written Notice of Default and Election to Sell. The undersigned or its predecessor caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. Sea Turtle Lovin’

By Mike Kelly

Sometimes distant things on the beach aren’t what they first seem to be. For example, I recently thought I saw a washed-up great white shark. But it turned out to be a king-size mattress folded in half.

Once near Cape Mendocino I thought I saw a flying saucer on the sand up ahead. I froze. Space aliens make me nervous because my imaginary friend tells me I’m a “chosen one.” And I’m not ready yet. But my imaginary friend is one of those nutty conspiracy theory guys, so I ignored him and continued walking. The unidentified object was only a dead olive ridley sea turtle (Lepidochelys olivacea).

Olive ridleys are the smallest of sea turtles and this was a full-grown male with a shell about 2 feet long. They normally live in the tropics and stay in warmer offshore waters when they venture this far north. They eat jellyfish, swimming crustaceans, very slow fish, etc. But they don’t fare well in our nearshore cold water.

They are also the most numerous sea turtle and they work hard at it. A female may mate with multiple males until she is, apparently, satisfied. After that, she’ll give a good thrashing to would-be late comers.

Now imagine that you and your sweetie are floating in a warm sea — wearing body shells, with flippers instead of arms and legs. You’d like to mate but you have no surface to lay on. And the chances of finding a floating king-size mattress are almost zero. Plus, you have nothing to hug and hold each other with. The act would be awkward because you can’t just swim full-speed at each other, hoping to stick the landing.

And if you did manage to joust yourselves together, even small waves would separate you in seconds. Real olive ridleys mate for several hours at a whack.

So you have two problems: 1. You have to merge your organs around your shells; and 2. you have to maintain a grip with flippers.

The male olive ridley sea turtle has these solutions: 1. a huge hydraulically-operated reach-around penis; and 2. sex claws.

Our male turtle still had his penis tucked away. In action, though, his winkle emerges from his cloaca near the end of his tail, which gives it extra reach and maneuverability.

And the claws on a male’s flippers are long and curved so they hook under the edge of the female’s shell as they do it turtle style. It may seem rough and clunky, but I like to think the sex claw embrace feels wonderful to them.

During the nesting season, thousands of female olive ridleys hit certain Mexican beaches to lay their eggs in gatherings called arribadas. So to continue your sea turtle reproduction role-play, you’ll need to flipper-crawl up a beach, flipper-dig a hole and give birth into it.

Whether a baby turtle turns out male or female depends on its incubation temperature. In sand below about 82 degrees, they all become male. And above about 87 degrees, they all become female. Our warming planet is causing some sea turtle populations to produce mostly females. So fewer and fewer males may have to satisfy more and more females.

But the most obvious form of female satisfaction solution is probably not an option. You’d think eating jellyfish and being able to hold their breath for hours would make male sea turtles master lady pleasers. But unfortunately, where we have lips, they have beaks.

By the way, thanks to the hero(es) who removed the mattress from my local beach! ●

Free Will Astrology

Week of Nov. 8, 2018

By Rob Breznsky

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In 1994, Aries pop diva Mariah Carey collaborated with an associate to write the song "All I Want For Christmas Is You." It took them 15 minutes to finish it. Since then it has generated $60 million in royalties. I wish I could unconditionally predict that you, too, will efficiently spawn a valuable creation sometime soon. Current planetary alignments do indeed suggest that such a development is more possible than usual. But because I tend to be conservative in my prophecies, I won't guarantee anything close to the $60-million figure. In fact, your reward may be more spiritual in nature than financial.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An interactive post at Reddit.com asked readers to write about "the most underrated feeling of all time." One person said, "When you change the sheets on your bed." Another extolled "the feeling that comes when you pay all your bills and you've still got money in the bank." Others said, "dancing under the rain," "physical contact like a pat on the back when you're really touch starved," and "listening to a song for the first time and it's so good you just can't stop smiling." I bring this to your attention, Taurus, because I suspect that the next two weeks will bring you a flood of these pleasurable underrated feelings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Beer makes you feel the way you ought to feel without beer," wrote Gemini author Henry Lawson. Do you have any methods for making yourself feel like you've drunk a few beers that don't involve drinking a few beers? If not, I highly recommend that you find at least one. It will be especially important in the coming weeks for you to have a way to alter, expand, or purify your consciousness without relying on literal intoxicants or drugs. The goal: to leave your groove before it devolves into a rut.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study the following five failed predictions. 1. "There is no likelihood man can ever tap the power of the atom." —Robert Miliham, Nobel Laureate in Physics, 1923. 2. "This 'telephone' has too many shortcomings to be seriously considered as a means of communication. The device is inherently of no value to us." —Western Union internal memo, 1876. 3. "Rail travel at high speeds is not possible because passengers, unable to breathe, would die of asphyxia." —Dionysius Lardner, scientist, 1830. 4. "There is no reason anyone would want a computer in their home." —Ken Olson, president of Digital Equipment Corporation, 1977. 5. "Most Cancerians will never overcome their tendencies toward hypersensitivity, procrastination, and fear of success." —Lanira Kentsler, astrologer, 2018. (P.S. What you do in the next 12 months could go a long way toward permanently refuting the last prediction.)

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): German scientists have created cochlear implants for gerbils that have been genetically modified, enabling the creatures to "listen" to light. The researchers' work is ultimately dedicated to finding ways to improve the lives of people with hearing impairments. What might be the equivalent of you gaining the power to "hear light"? I understand that you might resist thinking this way. "That makes no sense," you may protest, or "There's no practical value in fantasizing about such an impossibility." But I hope you'll make the effort anyway. In my view, stretching your imagination past its limits is the healing you need most right now. I also think that doing so will turn out to be unexpectedly practical.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Here's useful wisdom from the poet Rumi. "Our defects are the ways that glory gets manifested," he said. "Keep looking at the bandaged place. That's where the light enters you." Playwright Harrison David Rivers interprets Rumi's words to mean, "Don't look away from your pain, don't disengage from it, because that pain is the source of your power." I think these perspectives are just what you need to meditate on, Virgo. To promote even more healing in you, I'll add a further clue from poet Anna Kamienska: "Where your pain is, there your heart lies also." (P.S. Rumi is translated by Coleman Barks; Kamienska by Clare Cavanagh.)

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Artist David Hockney is proud of how undemanding he is toward his friends and associates. "People tell me they open my e-mails first," he says, "because they aren't demands and you don't need to reply. They're simply for pleasure." He also enjoys giving regular small gifts. "I draw flowers every day and send them to my friends so they get fresh blooms." Hockney seems to share the perspective expressed by author Gail Godwin, who writes, "How easy it was to make people happy, when you didn't want or need anything from them." In accordance with astrological omens, Libra, I suggest you have fun employing these approaches in the coming weeks.

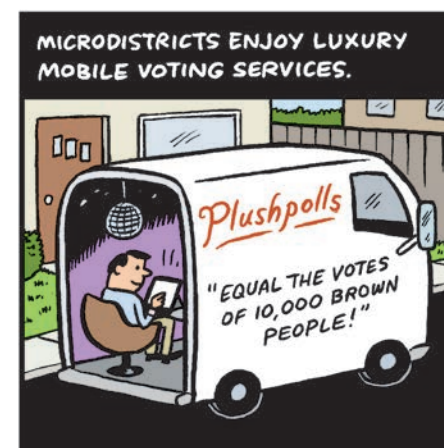

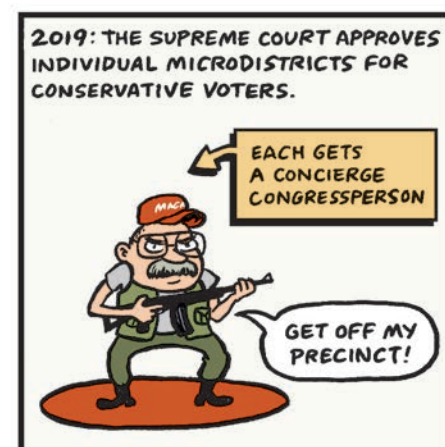

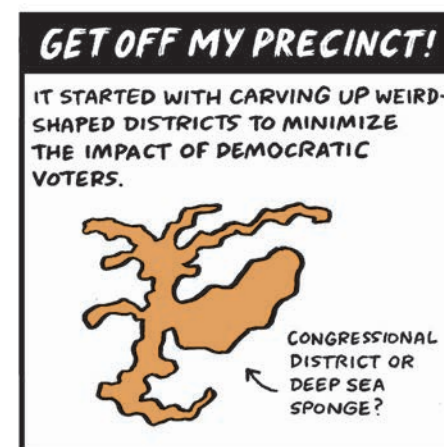

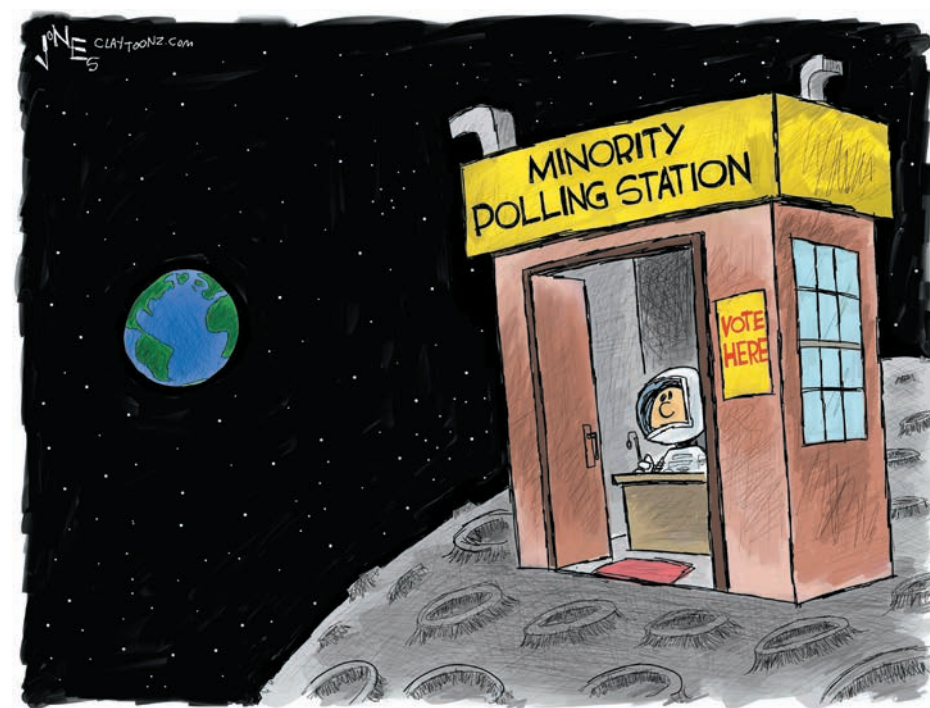

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): I am not currently a wanderer or voyager or entrepreneur or swashbuckler. But at other times in my life, I have had extensive experience with those roles. So I know secrets about how and why to be a wanderer and voyager and entrepreneur and swashbuckler. And it's clear to me that in the coming weeks you could benefit in unforeseen ways from researching and embodying the roles of curious wanderer and brave voyager and savvy entrepreneur and prudent swashbuckler.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "The best thing one can do when it is raining is let it rain." That brilliant formulation came from poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Does it seem so obvious as to not need mentioning? Bear with me while I draw further meaning from it, and suggest you use it as an inspiring metaphor in the coming weeks. When it rains, Sagittarius, let it rain; don't waste time and emotional energy complaining about the rain. Don't indulge in fruitless fantasizing about how you might stop the rain and how you'd love to stop the rain. In fact, please refrain from defining the rain as a negative event, because after all, it is perfectly natural, and is in fact crucial for making the crops grow and replenishing our water supply. (P.S. Your metaphorical "rain" will be equally useful.)

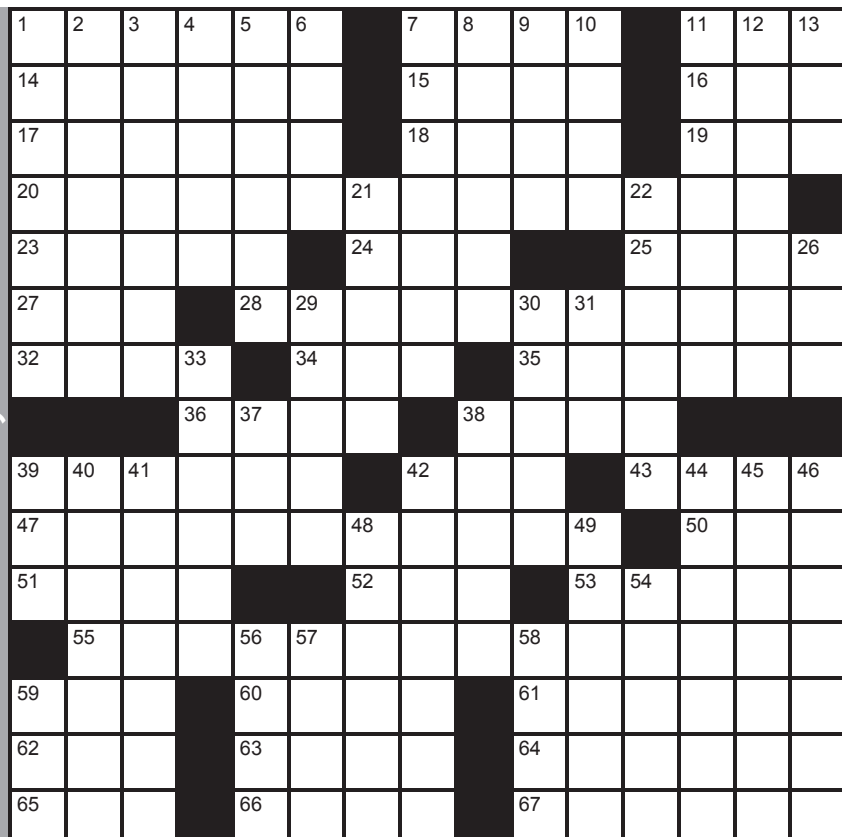

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): "Every true love and friendship is a story of unexpected transformation," writes activist and author Elif Shafak. "If we are the same person before and after we loved, that means we haven't loved enough." I bring this to your attention because you're in a phase when your close alliances should be activating healing changes in your life. If for some reason your alliances are not yet awash in the exciting emotions of redemption and reinvention, get started on instigating experimental acts of intimacy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): I suspect you will be an especially arousing influence in the coming weeks. You may also be inspiring and disorienting, with unpredictable results. How many transformations will you unleash? How many expectations will you dismantle? How many creative disruptions will you induce in the midst of the daily grind? I hesitate to underestimate the messy beauty you'll stir up or the rambunctious gossip you'll provoke. In any case, I plan to be richly amused by your exploits, and I hope everyone else will be, as well. For best results, I will pray to the Goddess of Productive Fun, begging Her to ensure that the commotions and uproars you catalyze will be in service to love and kindness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Gonzo journalist Hunter S. Thompson wasn't always a wild and crazy writer. Early in his career he made an effort to compose respectable, measured prose. When he finally gave up on that project and decided he could "get away with" a more uninhibited style, he described it as being "like falling down an elevator shaft and landing in a pool full of mermaids." I foresee a metaphorically comparable development in your future, Pisces. ●

DESIRABLE LOCATION ON LISCOM HILL!
Situating on approximately 2.5 acres, this 3 bedroom, 3 bath, 2600 sqft home with an attached garage, was built in 1980. There is a big deck and also a detached shop with power. The parcel has plenty of space for a garden and there are already a few fruit trees. With open areas as well as a wooded area with some trails, this property has a lot to offer. Call soon for a private showing.
